

Hudson River Sloop Clearwater

Invites you to...

...Sail the Hudson River on Historic Tall Ships

(LEFT) The Mystic Whaler is a traditionally rigged 110-foot schooner, built in 1967 as a tribute to the coastal trading schooners that plied New England's waters a century ago.

(RIGHT) Built of traditional plank-on-frame wooden construction, the sloop Clearwater is 75 feet in length on deck, 25 feet in beam and can hold up to 70 tons of cargo. The sloop rig consists of a single mast and fidded topmast which together rise to a height of 108 feet, a 65-foot long main boom and a 28-foot long bowsprit.

The Majestic Hudson

The 315-mile Hudson River is one of the country's most beautiful, rich in history and scenery. Over the centuries, the Hudson River has had vast economic impact on the region. After the completion of the Erie Canal in 1825, it became one of the nation's main venues for trade. The banks of the Hudson attracted many powerful industries and businesses, which continue to thrive today. Over the centuries, as businesses developed it became a running sewer, a toxic soup nearly incapable of sustaining life. The river itself was dying.

“Cleaning up a river was a cause worth fighting for... the Hudson is everybody's river, the Clearwater is everybody's boat.” – Pete Seeger

In the 1960's, legendary folksinger and activist Pete Seeger, together with a group of like-minded individuals, came up with the idea of building a boat. The sloop Clearwater was launched in 1969, built as a 19th century replica of the cargo sloops that Dutch and English settlers designed for the unique wind and water conditions they found on the Hudson River.

Sloop Clearwater: An internationally renowned symbol of environmental and social activism.

Now the powerful centerpiece for the non-profit organization of the same name, the Clearwater serves as a moveable classroom, laboratory, stage, and forum for public education programs. The Clearwater Organization provides grassroots leadership and supports every significant battle to protect the river by merging science, education, and advocacy. The Sloop Clearwater, called "America's Environmental Flagship" and "the boat that saved a river", stands for a vital cause: to defend and restore the Hudson River, one of our nation's greatest natural resources.
